Samuel Hopkins Adams Writes on Beauties of the Finger Lakes Region

In the accompanying article, Samuel Hopkins Adams, nationally known novelist, whose home, "Wide Waters," is on Owaseo Lake, speaks his admiration of the superb beauties of the Finger Lakes Region.

One of the compensations of an author's life is that he is comparatively free of geographical trammels. His office is in his hat; or, to be more accurate, under his hat. With a pen, some paper, a typewriter and a thesaurus, he may live and move where it pleases him.

Partly, I confess I was drawn back here by the call of association, for the place where this is written was my father's and my grandfather's before me.

CREDIT
Credit is an institution helpful to prosperity and progress.
It is not built, however, solely upon the financial rating of an individual, but is based upon the promptness and eagerness of the individual in paying his bills.
Many persons of large means really enjoy less credit than others of small means—because the former loaf in meeting their obligations while the latter hasten to anticipate maturing debts.
General credit conditions affect all classes—rich and poor.
General credit conditions are affected by the combined response of all, rich and poor, to those who extend credit.
If those of ample means will meet every debt promptly it will improve general credit conditions so materially as to improve general prosperity upon which all classes depend.
