Weedsport history published

By SHEILA TUCKER

Weedsport, created by the Erie Canal, has through the years played an important role as the center for various modes of transportation.

The unique history, lifestyle and character of Weedsport through the years has been effectively described in the "Weedsport Bicentennial" history written by Howard J. Finley, that has just been published.

Originally just a small hamlet called Macedonia—the village evolved from Weed's basin to Weedsport after the Erie Canal was constructed through it in the 1830s.

By-gone lifestyles—the Watson town ball team, the Burrill Opera House, the fairs, circuses and other amusements are vividly recalled. The founding families of Weedsport, the educational facilities, early businesses and newspapers are featured as well as the government-related aspects of village life.

Fraternal organizations, fire departments, churches and clubs of yesterday and today are included as well as the manufacturing interests, both past and present.

After the boom and bust days of the canal, Weedsport still had the iron horse passing her way. No less than three railroads and one trolley road served the village until recent years.

Finley has captured in his history the impact that these various modes of transportation have had in sustaining the village through the years.

Throughout the well-written copy are humorous tales of Weedsport happenings as well as some of the villages outstanding moments and personages.

Old photos of native sons, the canal, schools and businesses are generously included and relate directly to the written material.

Finley, the author of this community sponsored publication is both the Weedsport and Brutus historian. He was one of the founders of the Old Brutus Historical Society and has been the prime mover in gathering the vast collection now housed in the society's museum.

Finley's history chronologically evolves and includes the history of the military tract and the greater town of Brutus up to modern times.

PUBLIC NOTICE

NOTICE
New York State Electric & Gas Corporation has filed to become effective July 15, 1976, subject to acceptance by the Public Service Commission, revisions to its General Information Schedule PSC No. 30 - Gas, applicable throughout the gas territory served by the Corporation.

The Corporation filed procedures designed to limit the number of estimated bills and to facilitate obtaining actual meter readings. The Corporation will limit the number of routine consecutively estimated bills to four monthly or two bi-monthly bills. If this occurs because of lack of access to the meter, the Corporation will request the use of a dial-card for a reading or request that a reading be furnished by telephone or request an appointment with the customer for a meter reading.

After six months of consecutively estimated bills caused by lack of access, the Corporation will send a letter to the customer or landlord offering, without charge, to make a special appointment for meter readings, including evenings and Saturdays.

If after eight months of consecutively estimated bills, the recipient has not appropriately responded to the first letter, the Corporation will send a second letter offering a special appointment and advising the recipient that if he fails to make an appointment, a special charge for refusal to provide access to the meter of $25.00 will be added to the next bill.

Within two months no response is received to the second letter, the Corporation will send a registered letter advising the recipient that, in accordance with the Commission's directive, the Corporation will apply for a court order to gain access to the meter and/or apply to the court for such other relief as may be appropriate. The letter will also state the court costs shall be paid by the customer or landlord.

The Corporation will be permitted to invoke these new provisions whenever a customer with a remote reading device or a customer submitting dial-card readings refuses the Corporation access to the meter at least once each 12 months.

Copies of the filing are available for public inspection, giving full details of the revisions at each Corporation office where applications for service may be made.
