

SANDMAN STORY FOR TONIGHT

MR. COYOTE TRICKS MR. FOX
Part II

JUST as I thought," said Mr. Coyote, as he ran toward the hill where the sheep and lambs were feeding. "Well, it won't hold two, so I am safe even if I have to chase all over the place. I expect there is something in that water that will hold him till he drowns."

But Mr. Coyote was mistaken, for once he was not as clever as Mr. Fox. Mr. Fox was right. It was not a trap, but a barrel placed in the ground to hold water for the animals.

"You can't trust any one," Mr. Fox was thinking as he scrambled out. "He didn't believe me, so he pushed me in. I wonder if there was a turkey around here or if he just told me that to get me to stop."

Mr. Fox shook his coat and looked after Mr. Coyote running toward the hill. "I will meet you again some fine day, my friend," he said. "I never forget a little thing like this."

Mr. Fox suddenly stopped shaking himself and stood still, looking toward the hill, and as he looked his mouth opened in a wide smile. "If I am not mistaken, Mr. Coyote, I am about to have revenge," he said. "The last one who laughs laughs the hardest. It seems to me I've heard of some saying that means the same thing."

Mr. Fox now ran a little way and dropped into the tall grass, his eyes fixed all the time on the hill, and Mr. Coyote—and some one else.

The same one else was old Mr. Ram, who was following Mr. Coyote right up the hill, but Mr. Coyote was so intent upon getting a lamb to finish his breakfast he did not turn around.

Mr. Coyote got to the top of the hill and so did Mr. Ram at the very moment that Mr. Coyote reached for a lamb and being an expert at butting he gave Mr. Coyote a butt that sent him rolling down the hill.

But this did not satisfy Mr. Ram. He came along after Mr. Coyote and when he stopped he gave him another butt with his strong head that sent him near where Mr. Fox lay on the ground.

"I think you are headed for the trap," said Mr. Fox as Mr. Coyote rolled past him. Mr. Coyote picked himself up, but before he could collect his wits to know where he was Mr. Ram gave him another butt which landed him right in the barrel of water. This seemed to satisfy Mr. Ram and he trotted off toward the hill, where his family were waiting, and watching their clever master tumble Mr. Coyote about.

Mr. Coyote managed to scramble out. He did not stop to shake his coat, but ran for a wall, but Mr. Fox had no notion of letting him off without giving him the last laugh.

He ran to the wall and leaped over. "Coyote," he called, "where is that fat turkey you told me about?"

The next time you try to fool a fox, remember he knows how to play tricks as well as a coyote."

"There!" said Mr. Fox, as he trotted for home. "He will be sure to think I had something to do with all that has happened to him, and think I paid him for playing a trick on me. Yes, the one who gets the last laugh has the most fun," and Mr. Fox stopped and threw up his head and laughed as he thought how funny Mr. Coyote looked as Mr. Ram butted him down the hill.

Flushing Property Owners Protest Paying for Road

Owners of property along Broadway, Flushing, are preparing to make a fight against the assessment to be levied for the widening of that thoroughfare from Cemetery lane, Flushing, to the city line at Little Neck. They have formed an association and will hold a meeting within a few days to outline their plan of action. William H. Sullivan of the contracting firm of Sullivan Brothers of Flushing, and Assemblyman Joseph H. S. Thomas are among the owners said to be opposed to the present plan of assessment.

The property owners claim that they should not be assessed for the improvement and that, as Broadway is the main highway along the north shore of Long Island, residents of Nassau and Suffolk Counties and these in other parts of the Greater City will derive as much benefit from the widening as will the owners of the property.

The action was brought by Robert Lofferts and Francis J. Sullivan, members of the Lofferts Manor Association.
